Activist smokes joint at school district HQ

Seeing green. N.A. Poe says revenue from legal marijuana could boost the school district's budget.

Quoted
"I'm not naive enough to think that I have the answers to the problem, but I know cannabis can be part of the solution."
Poe

Pot activist and comedian N.A. Poe smoked marijuana in front of the School District of Philadelphia headquarters to draw attention to the possibility of funding schools by taxing marijuana.
CHARLES MOSTOLLER

A marijuana-legalization activist has released a video of himself smoking marijuana on the steps of the Philadelphia School District's administration building in an effort to highlight funds that legalized — and taxed — marijuana could provide the school district.

The video, called "Pot for Teacher," takes viewers on a three-minute tour of the financial problems facing the district. The title is a play on the Van Halen tune "Hot for Teacher," whose opening riffs are featured.

"Why am I dressed like a community college philosophy professor, you ask?" N.A. Poe tells the camera. "Because we're going to be smoking this joint outside Philadelphia School District headquarters, a district in dire straits that could really use some homegrown economic stimulus."

It's true that a tax regime could be a boon to state or local coffers. In Colorado, fees and taxes associated with marijuana brought in $102 million in fiscal year 2014-2015, according to documents in that state.

While most of those taxes go into Colorado's general fund, a 15 percent levy on wholesalers has been directed to school construction, according to USA Today.

Philadelphia decriminalized small amounts of marijuana in September. People caught with under 30 grams — about an ounce — are given tickets rather than being put in handcuffs.

Despite being on school property, it's unclear if Poe could face criminal repercussions for smoking on school property.

Even though it's been decriminalized, marijuana remains illegal at the state level, and there are — potentially — enhanced penalties for possession of marijuana on school grounds.

Fernando Gallard, a spokesman for the School District of Philadelphia, said he was unable to interpret the state to determine whether the administrative offices count as a school, but he noted that the building does have classrooms for the Philadelphia Virtual Academy, a cyber school.

Poe, for his part, has tempted the fates before. His Smokedown 420 series led a protest of marijuana activists in June that saw hundreds of people smoking marijuana as they marched down the street — accompanied by the Philadelphia Police Department's Civil Affairs Unit.

Should it be legal?

Philly's premier pot activist

N.A. Poe has been a pro-marijuana legalization and generally prop-pot activist for years who famously was arrested by federal park rangers during a marijuana rally on Independence Mall.

Along with military veteran and fellow advocate Mike Whiter, Poe smoked weed outside Citizens Bank Park during the Phillies' home opener in April to demand access to medicinal marijuana for veterans with PTSD. He has interviewed people who can't legally get marijuana for their sick children even though it's the medicine their doctors recommend.

Poe also lit up a joint outside Geno's Steaks in South Philly to draw attention to the racial disparity in marijuana arrests in Philadelphia.

Ruffled. Atheists call foul on inmates making pope chair

Pope Francis' visit to Philadelphia has almost everyone excited, including inmates at the city jail where he is scheduled to hold a mass on Sept. 26.

But one group isn't pleased that some of those inmates have been working on a chair for the Holy Father to sit in when he gets here — the atheist Freedom From Religion Foundation (FFRF).

In a "letter of protest" to Commissioner Louis Giorla issued by the FFRF, the group's co-president, Annie Laurie Gaylor, called the project a "misuse of prisoners" which violated prisoners' First Amendment rights "by honoring Catholicism's leaders above all others."

POPE FRANCIS /GETTY IMAGES

"PPS [Philadelphia Prison Systems] must remain neutral toward religion in order to accommodate all inmates," Gaylor wrote. "By singling out Pope Francis, PPS appears to be endorsing his sectarian religious message."

Because PPS is a government agency, Gaylor argued, it must not show any favor toward any religion — and the pope chair could make non-Catholic inmates feel left out or like "outsiders," she wrote.

A prisons representative did not respond to a request for comment.

A group of inmates at Philadelphia Industrial Correctional Center volunteered to create and refinish a walnut chair, which will be reupholstered by inmates at Curran-Fromhold Correctional Facility, where Pope Francis will deliver his mass to inmates.

Germantown

Man pleads guilty to street kidnapping

Delvin Barnes, 37, who kidnapped a Philadelphia woman off a Germantown street Nov. 2, pleaded guilty in federal court Thursday. Federal prosecutors will seek a sentence of 35 years.

Surveillance video showed Barnes grab the woman, who was walking home from a SEPTA bus, and drag her into his car, sparking an interstate manhunt.

Delvin Barnes / PROVIDED

The victim was found safe after Barnes was located and arrested in Maryland three days later on Nov. 5.

Barnes claimed he planned to just rob his victim, and kidnapped her because a passerby saw him grab her, reports say.

Barnes pleaded guilty to kidnapping and "sexually exploiting" his victim. He also pleaded guilty to kidnapping, sexual assault and attempted murder charges for an incident involving a teenage girl in Virginia a month prior to the kidnapping. METRO

City Council introduces restroom bill

Progress. New bill would mandate private facilities to label single-stall bathrooms as gender neutral.

Many public bathrooms in Philadelphia would have to be gender neutral under a bill introduced in Philadelphia's city council on Thursday.

The measure — which applies only to bathrooms with a single occupant, not bathrooms with multiple stalls — was hailed by activists in the gay, lesbian and transgender communities who see it as a measure aimed at inclusion for people. Activists say many transgender people associate public restrooms with stress because people may challenge their right to use one bathroom or another.

The bill "fairly and accurately renders restrooms what they are, restrooms, and not places to police other people's gender," said Helen "Nellie" Fitzpatrick, Mayor Michael Nutter's director of LGBT affairs.

Gender neutrality in public restrooms is an ongoing trend. Many colleges feature co-ed restrooms, and some — like Oberlin — have co-ed showers.

Likewise, many bars go beyond what is envisioned under this bill. Some feature a private stall with common washing areas. At The Barn, on 49th and Baltimore Avenue in West Philadelphia, new owners simply didn't assign genders to the two multi-stall bathrooms.

For restaurants that have gender-neutral bathrooms, it's a topic that appears occasionally on Yelp reviews.

"I didn't like it, and I would imagine women would like it less," reads one review of Barclay's Prime.

On the other hand, some not only don't seem to mind, they like it.

"I don't know their reasoning, but this was great to see as restrooms don't need to be gendered," wrote one reviewer of City Tap House on Logan Square.

MILLENNIALS, DON'T EVER FORGET SEPT. 11

Friday marks the 14th anniversary of the horrific terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center in New York City. After Pearl Harbor, nothing compares to the effect this tragedy had on American life.

I was 9 years old in Houston when my teacher told me my mother was picking me up early from school. Never had I seen a carpool line as long in my life, with my schoolmates initially celebrating our day off. What we didn't understand was how major this situation was going to be for our future.

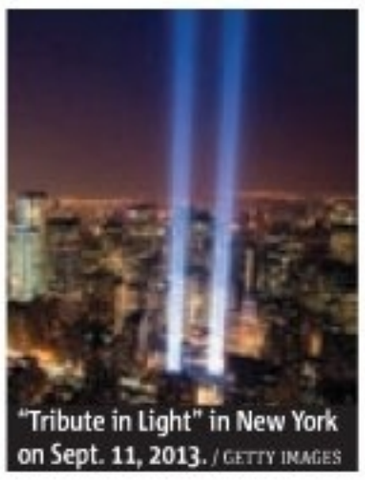
Many growing pains and history lessons after taught me what we have lost. My generation will never know what an easy airport trip is like. We will never know what it feels like to not live under constant surveillance at any given time or witness discrimination against Muslims.

We do not fully understand how isolated our understanding of global politics have been since we began living in a war on terrorism.

But what has shocked me most about my life on the East Coast is how many people my age have really said nothing about 9/11 this week. Sure, it is one day of the year, but the constant recollection of its significance on our lives surely deserves more reflection and discussion.

Philly is the second-largest city on the East Coast; certainly we have more heart to give for the city up the coast that is mourning this day.

When I look at the current political climate we are all under, the issues we face today are rooted in the turmoil 9/11 created.



"Tribute in Light" in New York on Sept. 11, 2013. / GETTY IMAGES

The wars and recession that followed were due in part to our government's reshaping of foreign and domestic defense. Today, my generation cannot forget the term "weapons of mass destruction" or shake off the Islamophobia that made anyone wearing a veil or turban suspicious.

Our social and cultural misunderstandings of what it means to be an American largely comes from the overinflated sense of pride from the sorrow of that event. Sept. 11 united us, but also divided us. Not all Americans were favored equally on that day.

So 14 years later, what can we do?

For one, we are the generation of digital activists and counter-cultural thinkers. Let's bring light to addressing the first responders who were at Ground Zero and saved lives.

One cause that has been helping to support them is the World Trade Center Health Program. They are providing health treatment to 30,000 first responders for illnesses, such as cancer, caused during the aftermath of 9/11. However, the program is set to expire by Congress.

It would be momentous of us to lend our voices and demand that Congress renew the 9/11 first responders bill. This is also something that our city and state elected officials can also do to ensure that we never forget to honor the fallen and living lives that have been brave enough to help ensure our sense of freedom. We must never forget them.

Correction: Last week's Ernest Opinion incorrectly described a Democratic Party bylaw. This bylaw does not apply to elections that involve public votes, but only to party nominations for special elections, which are not subject to public vote. Metro regrets the error.

Opinion

TOM FOREMAN

TOM FOREMAN IS A CNN CORRESPONDENT AND AUTHOR OF THE UPCOMING BOOK "MY YEAR OF RUNNING DANGEROUSLY."

THE CRACKPOT JACKPOT

My younger daughter grew up fixated on Alice in Wonderland. Maybe because her name is Ali. But we watched the movie, read the book and played at make-believe tumbles down the rabbit hole so many times I began desperately trying to interest her in other tales.

"Hey look, Peter Pan!" I'd say with a broad grin. No response. "A Little Princess!" I'd say, beaming. Nope. "I don't suppose you'd be interested in 'A Farewell to Arms'?"

"Daaaad," she'd say, "I just want to hear about a crazy place where there are no rules and nothing makes sense!"

"Have you ever dealt with an airline's customer service department?"

It comes to mind because I think many voters are staring into the looking glass of 2016 and seeing growing insanity on the other side. Democratic outrage is aimed at Donald Trump, who prattles like the Mad Hatter about great walls, China and how women just love him. Repubs (when they are not savaging Hillary Clinton) rage about Bernie Sanders, who rushes around like the March Hare, spouting liberal talking points as if he is leading a conga line down Main Street to the steady thump of "Get Up, Stand Up."

Quoted

"Democratic outrage is aimed at Donald Trump, who prattles like the Mad Hatter about great walls, China and how women just love him."

The most dedicated members of the opposition would sum up each candidate in a phrase: "What a crackpot!" Yet Trump is reigning in the GOP polls, and Sanders is rising fast against Clinton, who started with so many advantages that political analysts once gave Sanders no chance.

So how is this happening? Trump and Sanders are saying what they think — loud and proud. They are taking daring (some would say foolish) positions even as pundits howl. And, importantly, the more-mainstream challengers just continue working their focus groups, grinning like Cheshire cats and saying almost nothing — refusing to take real stances, right now, on issues that matter.

Once that was the way to victory, but I'm not so sure anymore. I think we have passed through a mirror and on this side authenticity matters, no matter how wild. And that has left many of the old-fashioned pols staring at the numbers muttering, "Curiouser and curiouser."

Senate. Democrats block effort to kill Iran nuclear deal

A Republican-backed effort to kill the Iran nuclear agreement was blocked in the U.S. Senate on Thursday, handing a major foreign policy victory to President Barack Obama.

Forty-two Democrats and independents voted against a measure to advance the bill, meaning opponents of the nuclear agreement failed to get the 60 votes needed in the 100-member chamber to proceed with a resolution of disapproval of the pact.

Democrats said that the vote killed efforts in the Republican-controlled Congress to derail the nuclear pact between six world powers and Tehran. Had opponents of the agreement passed such a resolution, Obama would have been barred from waiving many U.S. sanctions on Iran, a crucial part of the nuclear pact.

Quoted

"We'll revisit the issue next week and see if maybe any folks want to change their minds." McConnell

But the Senate's Republican majority leader, Mitch McConnell, immediately took steps to clear the way for another Senate vote on the matter.

Under a law Obama signed in May, Congress has a 60-day period ending on Sept. 17 to pass a resolution disapproving the international agreement.

White House: US to accept 10,000 Syrian refugees

Help. It is the first specific commitment the U.S. has made toward increasing its acceptance of refugees.

Quoted

"This is totally within the realm of what the current system on autopilot could do. ... This is not time for autopilot. ... This is time to really ramp things up."

Refugees

Republicans speak out about the idea of taking in additional refugees.

- Senior Republican Sens. Bob Corker and Lindsey Graham have said they are open to the idea of allowing more refugees, as long as they are subjected to security screenings.

President Barack Obama has directed his administration to prepare to take in at least 10,000 Syrian refugees over the next year, the White House said on Thursday.

Since the start of the Syrian civil war in 2011, the United States has taken in 1,500 refugees, with 300 more expected to be cleared by October.

But refugee advocates and some members of Congress say taking in an additional 10,000 refugees does not go far enough toward addressing the humanitarian crisis triggered by the war, which has prompted a massive refugee influx into Europe.

In a letter distributed to House Democrats and seen by Reuters, Democratic Representative David Cicilline asked Obama to accommodate 65,000 Syrian refugees by the end of 2016. Religious groups have called for the United States to accept 100,000 Syrian refugees.

European countries have taken in waves of migrants fleeing violence. Germany allowed 20,000 in over the weekend and is preparing for 800,000 this year.

Melanie Nezer, vice president of HIAS, a global refugee advocacy group, said allowing 10,000 more refugees from Syria is not an adequate response to the crisis at hand.

The United States is conducting airstrikes in Syria as part of its effort to fight against Islamic State. The United States currently admits annually a total of 70,000 refugees from around the world, and is due to increase that total by 5,000 for the fiscal year starting in October.

White House spokesman Josh Earnest would not say whether the 10,000 Syrians would be a part of or in addition to that total.

Earnest said national security was a top concern for admitting Syrians, a country rife with anti-American militants, noting that intensive security screening for refugees could take up to 18 months.

"I do feel confident in telling you that the president will not sign off on a process that cuts corners when it comes to the basic safety and security of the American people and the U.S. homeland," Earnest told reporters.

The additional background checks and processing will require a "significant financial commitment" from Congress, Earnest said. REUTERS

1 US urged to tighten cybersecurity to counter Chinese hacking

The United States must beef up cyber security against Chinese hackers targeting a broad range of U.S. interests to raise the cost to China of engaging in such activities, America's top intelligence official said on Thursday.

The testimony by Director of National Intelligence James Clapper before a congressional committee added to pressure on Beijing over its conduct in cyberspace just weeks before Chinese President Xi Jinping makes a state visit to Washington.

Presenting a dire assessment of global cyber threats, Clapper said China and Russia posed the most advanced cyberthreats but that Iran and North Korea could also cause serious disruptions despite having less sophisticated technology.

The Obama administration is considering targeted sanctions against Chinese individuals and companies for cyberattacks against U.S. commercial targets, several U.S. officials have said.

Chinese hackers have also been implicated in the massive hacking of the U.S. government's personnel office disclosed this year. Two breaches of security clearance applications exposed the personal data of more than 20 million federal employees. REUTERS

2 Google pushes into mobile payment

Google said it would roll out Android Pay, a one-touch payment app on Android devices, in more than 1 million locations in the United States.

The payment service can be used through Android devices with near-field communication technology and Google's KitKat 4.4+ operating system.

Android Pay will compete with Apple Inc's Apple Pay in the mobile payments market, which research firm IDC estimates at $1 trillion in 2017.

Existing users of Google Wallet app can access Android Pay through an update, while new users can download it from Google Play store in the next few days. REUTERS

3 Man with hand grenade shot dead by police in Kansas City

A police officer shot and killed a man who was carrying a hand grenade when he emerged from his home in Kansas City, Missouri, after a 12-hour standoff with authorities, police said.

The grenade was later determined not to be live, according to police.

The man had barricaded himself in his home on Wednesday morning and made threats against Jackson County deputies who were there to serve an eviction notice, according to the Kansas City Police Department, which did not release the man's name. REUTERS

4 Honda gets California approval for self-driving cars on roads

Honda has received a permit from the state of California to drive its autonomous vehicles on public streets, joining companies ranging from Google to Volkswagen in testing the fast-growing technology.

The California Department of Motor Vehicles on its website listed Honda as the most recent of 10 companies that had received the self-driving permits as of Friday.

Other companies already approved include Daimler AG's Mercedes Benz, Tesla Motors, Nissan and BMW. REUTERS

5 Fiat Chrysler to recall 1.06M trucks over steering glitch

FCA US LLC, a unit of Fiat Chrysler Automobiles NV, is recalling about 1.06 million of its Ram trucks in the United States to fix a steering wheel defect that may cause an air bag to deploy inadvertently.

The company said an internal investigation discovered that these trucks may have steering-wheel wiring harnesses that wear because of contact with a spring.

Such wear may cause a short-circuit that may result in the inadvertent deployment of the driver-side air-bag. REUTERS

Head of NYPD issues apology for arrest of tennis pro Blake

Sorry. The top cop offered apologies to James Blake on behalf of both the NYPD and Mayor Bill de Blasio.

Bratton apologizes. / GETTY IMAGES

After a very public game of phone tag, New York City's top cop finally got ahold of pro tennis star James Blake to apologize for his mistaken arrest.

"I spoke to Mr. Blake a short time ago and personally apologized for [Wednesday's] incident," NYPD Commissioner Bill Bratton said in a statement late Thursday.

Earlier in the day, Bratton told reporters that he has tried to reach out to Blake to personally apologize, and to extend said apologies on behalf of Mayor Bill de Blasio, but had not been able to reach the athlete.

Bratton pushed back on the idea that Blake, who is black, was targeted by the five arresting officers, who are white, on account of racial bias.

Chief of Detectives Robert Boyce told reporters that the actual suspect who officers mistook Blake for, shared many physical traits with the tennis player.

The NYPD declined to release a photo of the alleged suspect, who was eventually arrested for credit card fraud in the vicinity of the midtown Manhattan hotel Blake was staying at.

"They look like twins," Boyce said.

A witness at the hotel mistook Blake for the suspect, which led to the five officers charging toward and arresting Blake.

The officer, who has not been identified, was placed on desk duty shortly after the incident.

"The use of force is such that I'm comfortable that it's in the best interest of the department to place the officer on modified assignment," Bratton said.

Upward. Lockheed-Boeing rocket venture expands partnership with Bezos' space firm

United Launch Alliance, the biggest supplier of rockets for the U.S. military, will ramp up rocket engine work with Amazon.com founder Jeff Bezos' space company, the companies said on Thursday.

The move comes as ULA, a partnership of Lockheed Martin and Boeing, is considering a $2 billion cash buyout offer from Aerojet Rocketdyne Holdings, sources familiar with the matter told Reuters.

Aerojet also is developing an alternative engine for ULA's next-generation rocket, called Vulcan.

ULA and Bezos' space company, Blue Origin, said last year that the companies would jointly develop a liquid natural gas-fueled rocket engine to replace the Russian-made RD-180 engines that currently power ULA's workhorse Atlas 5 booster.

Jeff Bezos, the founder of Blue Origin and Amazon.com / GETTY IMAGES

ULA can no longer import the Russian engines for U.S. military launches, the bulk of its business, under a congressional ban enacted in response to Russia's involvement in Ukraine.

Aerojet is working on another engine, called the AR1, though its development is at least 16 months behind Blue Origin's BE-4, ULA Chief Executive Tory Bruno said at a congressional hearing in June.

ULA has a contract with Aerojet to use the AR1 as a backup if Blue Origin's development program stumbles.

ULA, Lockheed, Boeing and Aerojet have declined to comment about the reported buyout offer.

However, on Thursday ULA and Blue Origin said they had agreed to expand the production capabilities of the BE-4, which is targeted to make its debut flight in 2019.

Bezos is scheduled to be in Florida on Tuesday to unveil plans for its own rocket manufacturing plant and launch pad at Cape Canaveral Air Force Station, located just south of NASA's Kennedy Space Center. Blue Origin intends to use the BE-4 engine in its rockets as well as sell them to ULA and potentially other customers. REUTERS

"This new agreement is an important step toward building BE-4s at the production rate needed for the Vulcan launch vehicle."

Merkel says Facebook needs to do more against racist posts

German Chancellor Angela Merkel urged Facebook to do more against racist comments and hate posts, in comments due to be published in a regional newspaper on Friday.

Germany is expecting a record-breaking influx of refugees this year. Politicians and celebrities have voiced concern about a rise of xenophobic comments in German on Facebook and other social media platforms because of the refugee crisis.

"When people stir up sedition on social networks using their real name, it's not only the state that has to act, but also Facebook as a company should do something against these [posters]," Merkel told regional newspaper Rheinische Post.

She said Facebook already had the necessary code of conduct, but there was a lack of control and enforcement. "The rules need to be implemented," Merkel said.

The Rheinische Post newspaper is published in Germany's most populous state, North Rhine-Westphalia, which is obliged to take around a fifth of all refugees coming to the country.

Last month, Justice Minister Heiko Maas accused Facebook of doing too little to thwart racist and hate posts.

Maas sent a letter to Facebook public policy director Richard Allan in Dublin, saying he received many complaints from users that their protests about racist posts have been ignored. He suggested a meeting in Berlin on Sept. 14. REUTERS

Feast on this

Feeling the pressure of an overabundance of great, buzzworthy TV? Narrowing down what you should be adding to your DVR queue each fall is tough. So why not cater your TV watching to your tastes? Sometimes, you want something big and meaty to chew on all night, and sometimes you're more in the mood for something light and fluffy. To help you decide on your evening meals, here's our menu for all the new shows you can watch this fall.

LISA WEIDENFELD

Comfort food

When you want to spend time watching people (or puppets) who look familiar, these are the shows to veg out with.

ABC

'The Muppets'

There aren't many creative properties as beloved as the Muppets, who return for a new show this fall. The premise: It's an "Office"-style mockumentary about the filming of a late-night talk show Miss Piggy is hosting. Backstage high jinks abound, and the Internet was afire a few weeks ago with the news that Kermit and Piggy had split and Kermit was seeing a new pig. Is all of this a bit too 2015 for a group of puppets from the '70s? You'll have to decide for yourself.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 22, 8 P.M., ABC

CBS

'Life in Pieces'

Sitcoms about families are nothing new, but this show debuts a new way of making sure everyone in the family gets equal attention. Each episode is split into four vignettes, with each one following a different member of the family, from the adult children, played by Thomas Sadoski, Colin Hanks and Betsy Brandt, to the parents, played by Dianne Wiest and James Brolin. There's no need to reinvent the wheel when you have a group of pros like these in charge.

MONDAY, SEPT. 21, 8:30 P.M., CBS

FOX

'The Grinder'

Rob Lowe's career has taken a lot of turns over the years, but recently he's been having fun making fun of his own sheer attractiveness, as he did on "Parks and Recreation" and now on "The Grinder." He plays an actor best known for portraying an over-the-top TV lawyer, who has since decided to move back to his hometown to help out his actual lawyer brother, who's played by Fred Savage. Not surprisingly, Savage is not thrilled by the presence of his older, famous sibling.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 29, 8:30 P.M., FOX

FOX

'Rosewood'

"Brilliant, eccentric man outsmarts everyone around him" gets another turn with this new procedural, with Morris Chestnut starring as the titular Rosewood, who runs a private, high-tech autopsy business, and is brought in to consult with the local police department. He's more "Castle" than "House," but with a twist: He's got a series of serious, life-threatening health issues, none of which affect his day-to-day functioning, but which you can expect to arise at dramatic moments.

Cocktails after work

Sometimes you're just looking for a good time. Try these for tart — but occasionally hard-hitting — takes on a range of unusual topics.

'Supergirl'

CBS

The latest superhero show is finally, for once, starring a woman. Supergirl is a little Ally McBealesque — Melissa Benoist's Kara Danvers (Clark Kent's cousin) is smart and competent, but lacking a little bit in confidence. Fitting, then, that Calista Flockhart returns to network television as her "Devil Wears Prada"-channeling boss. Though the show has its romcom side, it also devotes a whole scene to discussing whether "girl" is really an appropriate name for its heroine. MONDAY, OCT. 26, 8:30 P.M., CBS

'Crazy Ex Girlfriend'

EDDY CHEN, THE CW

This dark dramedy is exploring what leads someone to fit the stereotype of the "crazy ex girlfriend." Oh, and the crazy ex frequently imagines that parts of her life are a musical. Have you already stopped reading? Hopefully not, because the show, at least in the pilot sent to critics, is pulling off that mix of genres perfectly, with music comedy star Rachel Bloom stepping into her first starring TV role with confidence. It might be the most unusual show on this fall. MONDAY, OCT. 12, 8 P.M., CW

'Casual'

HULU

Hulu seems to like dark comedies for its original programming, between this and the catty "Difficult People." The show stars Michaela Watkins ("Saturday Night Live"). Here, she's a therapist trying to adjust to the changes in her life after her husband leaves her and she and her teenage daughter have to move in with her possibly suicidal brother, who created a popular dating site. It's a lot of premise, but the show is mostly about hanging out with their struggling, but always funny, family. WEDNESDAY, OCT. 7, HULU

'Grandfathered'

FOX

John Stamos returns to TV in this show about a playboy restaurant owner who discovers, in one of the all-time weirdest days, that he's both a father and a grandfather, as his previously unknown son has a baby. Can he adjust to being a family man? Stamos is very much playing to type, but when that's as charming as it is here, we're not going to complain. Extra credit here for the welcome presence of Paget Brewster, who plays the mother of his son, and perhaps the lost love of his life (of course). TUESDAY, SEPT. 29, 8 P.M., FOX

For the carnivores

If you're looking to really indulge in your TV time, and you like your steak rare and bloody, these are the shows for you.

'Bastard Executioner'

FX

Fans of "Sons of Anarchy" should check this one out, since it comes from "SOA" creator Kurt Sutter. This show is just as dark and gory as the first, but with a big change: It's set in the medieval era, which we assume means fewer motorcycles appear. Katey Sagal and Stephen Moyer of "True Blood" star, with Lee Jones taking on the lead. TUESDAY, SEPT. 15, 10 P.M., FX

'Fargo'

FX

While people might have been hesitant about the idea of a "Fargo" TV show, the success of the first season put those concerns to rest. Season 2 is set in the '70s, and features Patrick Wilson as a stoic lawman, accompanied by Ted Danson. There are other familiar faces, from Kirsten Dunst to Brad Garrett, but we won't spoil who the bad guys are. MONDAY, OCT. 12, 10 P.M., FX

'Scream Queens'

FOX

Not to be confused with "American Horror Story," this show from Ryan Murphy stars the Scream Queen herself, Jamie Lee Curtis, and pays homage to the meta commentary of the "Scream" movies. Emma Roberts plays a sociopathic sorority leader who would lead her girls to greatness if they weren't getting brutally murdered one by one. TUESDAY, SEPT. 22, 8 P.M., FOX

Sushi and fusion

Sometimes, you want something tasty but light that'll keep you moving into the night. This is what you should watch if you're on the run.

NBC

'The Blindspot'

We have to give Jaimie Alexander the "devoted to her craft" award: It takes hours to apply the full-body tattoos she wears in this thriller. She plays an amnesiac who's discovered naked in a bag in the middle of Times Square. It's really too bad she can't remember anything — those tattoos are clues about potential crimes, and she and her FBI keepers have to decode them. MONDAY, SEPT. 21, 10 P.M., NBC

CBS

'Limitless'

Remember that 2011 Bradley Cooper movie about a man who takes a magical drug that helps him use more of his brain power? This is the same thing, but with a new guy trying the drug. BCoop will be stopping by for occasional guest spots as his character from the movie, but the real star is Jake McDorman, who teams up with an FBI agent played by Jennifer Carpenter of "Dexter." TUESDAY, SEPT. 22, 10 P.M., CBS

'Quantico'

Get ready for timeline confusion: Each episode of "Quantico" swings between the aftermath of a terrorist attack, and the training of a group of FBI recruits, one of whom may have committed the attack. The series features Bollywood star Priyanka Chopra as the recruit accused of the crime, who must scramble to figure out who the actual perpetrator was. SUNDAY, SEPT. 27, 10 P.M., ABC

See if you can spot a single kid in this #ForceFriday line for "Star Wars" toys. Good luck. You're gonna need it. GETTY IMAGES

This past Thursday night, I spent hours in line waiting to purchase all the new "Star Wars" toys for #ForceFriday when it opened at midnight. When I brought my new BB-8 backpack to the counter, the guy said, "Oh, your kid is going to be a hit at school with this!" I replied, "You'd think it was for a child, but ..." I was sort of surprised, because most of the people in line that night were adults. With lightsabers. Making Wookiee noises. Adults.

I saw the same thing at Disney's D23 Expo and Star Wars Celebration. I see it in toy stores on nongeek holidays as well. When I joke about pulling money out of one "Star Wars" purse to buy another one while wearing my "World of Warcraft" Blood Elf insignia necklace and how that crosses some sort of geek line, most people laugh and say they did something similar last week. I spent the holiday weekend in a little town known for wine tasting and counted 23 "Star Wars"/Marvel/DC shirts in five minutes, on very drunk grown-ups.

For exclusive commentary, visit Metro.us/blogs

Things have changed in terms of fandom. We as adults are allowed to be silly and let our geek flag fly. Could you imagine this 10 years ago? Sure, during Comic-Con we all get nerdy, but in a semi-prissy wine village? This is new.

We all know why: superhero movie wish-fulfillment, new "Star Wars," video games. I spend a lot of time talking about what's wrong with Hollywood and the world at large, so this week, I just wanted to take a moment and revel in the happiness. I want to enjoy the fact that I got a high five from a very, very old man wearing the same Darth Vader shirt as I was in the grocery store this morning, and that my adult friends are all posting pictures of their remote control BB-8 toys (and when it's missing from your house, it totally wasn't me). It's nice to feel like there is magic in the world again, at least for a little while.

‘The Visit’ is M. Night Shyamalan being funny on purpose

Ignore this image of actress Olivia Delonge freaking out. Most of “The Visit” is fun, not freaky. UNIVERSAL PICTURES

‘The Visit’

Director: M. Night Shyamalan
Stars: Olivia DeJonge, Ed Oxenbould
Rating: PG-13

• • • • •

MATT PRIGGE
matt.prigge@metro.us

Despite the vitriol often heaped his way, there are many things M. Night Shyamalan does well — indeed, better than most. He’s strong with slow, creeping mood. He knows the value of offscreen space. His sincerity often curdles into unintentional camp, but when he deals with overcoming trauma, he often achieves real transcendence.

Almost none of these talents are what make “The Visit” as rollicking as it is. In fact, the things that it does well are things that have generally, for him, gone disastrously, namely comedy and quick footing. But “The Visit,” in which he crashes the party of cheapie found-footage horror (though it’s technically a mock-doc), is funny, or at least fun.

The film-within-the-film is made by two kids (Olivia DeJonge and Ed Oxenbould) — as they shlep off to the grandparents for a weeklong hoedown. Their elders seem like typical, mildly demented olds. Then they start acting weirder. Soon it appears something, something maybe supernatural and Shyamalanian, is afoot.

There’s a twist — the director’s first real one since 2004’s “The Village” — but it arrives around the last half hour, and it’s a gentler, goofier, almost subversive one than the ones that made the director’s name.

Thing is, Shyamalan doesn’t quite know what to do with it. It’s downright weird watching one of his films not particularly structured around Hitchcock knockoff set pieces. “The Visit” still works, especially as a horror that recognizes the build is sometimes more important than the delivery. If Shyamalan finds a way to marry what works here to the other things he does well elsewhere, look out.

‘90 Minutes in Heaven’

Director: Michael Polish
Stars: Hayden Christensen, Kate Bosworth

Kate Bosworth hopes for her wounded husband (Hayden Christensen) to get better in “90 Minutes in Heaven.” QUANTRELL COLBERT

Like last year’s “Heaven is for Real,” “90 Minutes in Heaven” is both not quite what you think and what you think. Both are made outside the usual small-time Christian film productions. Both are based on mega best-sellers boasting dodgy supernatural bona fides. And both could have been Trinity Broadcast Network-style monstrosities that did nothing but preach to the converted, but instead do slightly more.

Not that either film doesn’t preach to the converted, but there’s some effort to get at something else. The vast majority of the film has nothing to do with whether Baptist minister Don Piper (Hayden Christensen) actually saw a cheap and cheesy iteration of the afterlife after a nasty car accident. Most of it has to do with his glacial recovery and the toll it takes on his wife (Kate Bosworth, as subtly precise as she was in “Still Alice”).

“90 Minutes in Heaven” also has a weird pedigree. The director is Michael Polish, who once created Lynchian oddities such as “Twin Falls Idaho” and “Northfork” with his twin brother Mark. Polish partly plays ball: There are shamelessly moving scenes coated in sickly Christian pop ballads, goofy pet humor, numerous shills for McDonald’s and, briefly, actor-cum-former Republican presidential candidate Fred Dalton Thompson.

But there are also weird Polish-isms. Don’s internment in his hospital bed is treated like Cronenbergian body horror — one man imprisoned inside a broken shell, reduced at times to no more than indistinguishable moans. (Still, he got off a lot better than Christensen’s smoldering pre-Vader Anakin Skywalker.) But it still kowtows to its chief market. It’s a more interesting, even moving, film than it ever had to be without being very good. MP

'Learning to Drive' is not another White People Problems movie

'Learning to Drive'

Director: Isabel Coixet
Stars: Patricia Clarkson, Ben Kingsley
Rating: R

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

In "Learning to Drive," opening today at the Ritz 5, Ben Kingsley teaches Patricia Clarkson how to clog city streets with more vehicles. BROAD GREEN PICTURES

"Learning to Drive" is the story of a wealthy New Yorker (Patricia Clarkson) befriending a Sikh driving instructor (Ben Kingsley). But it's not what you think. By that, we mean it's not a White People Problems movie, with Clarkson's Wendy — of all things, a moneyed literary critic — learning lessons from a man of a different ethnicity and culture. Kingsley's Darwan isn't merely a device that allows Wendy to mend her own wounds, nor is he portrayed as a magical alien "other."

Instead, the movie cares equally about the characters as people, not just types. It's as thoughtful and delicate with its Sikh characters as it is with its rich New Yorkers.

"Drive" hatches a "Brief Encounter"-style almost-romance between its leads, but there are a couple moments when it feels things could go the other way, toward flattering its Western audience. Halfway through Darwan is greeted by his bride-to-be Jasleen (Sarita Choudhury), sent from India for an arranged marriage. Wendy initially scoffs at this, but the film itself remains nonjudgmental, allowing Darwan to retain parts of his culture that to some American viewers might seem foreign, if not evil.

There's tension in Darwan and Jasleen's marriage, but that's part and parcel of "Drive"'s agile avoidance of condescension. It's remarkably, refreshingly sensitive and respectful to its non-American characters, who exist entirely independently of Wendy's world, with their own problems as well as joys.

Indeed, the only offensive aspect is the concept of a Manhattanite wanting to clog the already bustling city streets with a vehicle not used as a taxi or Uber.

'The Second Mother'

Director: Anna Muylaert
Stars: Regina Case, Camila Mardila
Rating: R

A live-in housekeeper (Regina Case, right) tries to keep her headstrong daughter (Camila Mardila) from pissing off her wealthy, passive-aggressive employers. OSCILLOSCOPE LABORATORIES

The Brazilian dramedy "The Second Mother" is the type that lets entire scenes play out in unbroken, unmoving shots, staring at characters as they try to disguise their sometimes ugly intentions in polite chatter and unparsable body language. At its best, its view of the class struggle is just as clear-eyed. The second mother of the title is Val (Regina Case), a longtime live-in housekeeper currently interred at a splashy Sao Paolo home, where her necessary presence is often treated passive-aggressively by her employers. The monkey wrench thrown into this fraught if at least sustainable living situation is Jessica (Camila Mardila), Val's estranged daughter, who comes to crash with her mom and winds up not remotely willing to keep to her place.

Case is a well-known comic actor in Brazil, and she helps turn "The Second Mother" into a comedy of manners with a sharp satirical edge. The film needs her, as otherwise it would be at times a little too on-the-nose, and sometimes witlessly heavy-handed. The salt-and-pepper bearded father (Lourenco Mutarelli), who likes to walk around in Kings of Leon shirts, first makes a pass at Jessica, then beseeches her to run away with him, then badly tries to pass it off as a joke when she proves mystified.

By the conclusion everything's become too pat and needlessly self-empowering, compromising what had been an acidic and funny survey of how politeness on both sides of the income gap keep cruel social norms in place. It's at its best when it's drawing blood, not when it's flattering its viewers' good side and creating a tidy ending out of a situation that's far from it. MP

What was the most fun thing you did this summer?

Designers dish about their warm-weather vacays before the madness of New York Fashion Week.

Tina Chadha

Wes Gordon

"For my birthday in July, I spent the weekend in Harbour Island at Coral Sands Hotel. It's a charming place with the most gorgeous pink sand beaches and crystal clear water. We boated, swam, ate fresh seafood, caught up on reading and totally relaxed. It was perfect."

Karen Walker

"We always escape midyear to Fiji and my favorite spot there is Dolphin Island. Just me and my husband, no other guests, blue sky, thousands of palm trees, incredible home cooking by the gorgeous Dawn, who runs the show. What's not to love?"

Christian Siriano

"The most fun I had this summer was just relaxing in my pool in our new Connecticut house this summer. It was just great to chill and get away from the city. My version of swan lake!"

Marissa Webb

"Organizing my shoes in my closet. It might not seem like a monumental task, but this was a big achievement for me (I'm a little obsessed with color order). Still a work in progress!"

Mara Hoffman

"My husband and I recently purchased a house in upstate New York, which has been a longtime dream. It's my favorite place to go to reset and relax on the weekends with the fam — to be in the woods and with nature."

Rebecca Minkoff

"I love going out east and getting out to Montauk with my family. Any time spent at the beach with my family is my idea of perfect. My husband and I had a friend's 35th birthday party, which was '90s themed; I love dressing up!"

Ji Oh

"I went back to Seoul to visit my family and traveled throughout South Korea — visiting different beaches and old temples and enjoying authentic Korean cuisine. I made time to stop by The Leeum, which is a museum located in Hannam-dong, and its architecture is the best out of all the galleries in Seoul."

Anthony Jeselnik: 'As edgy as possible'

The comedian is on tour with Funny or Die's Oddball Festival.

RACHEL VIGODA
@rachelatmetro
rachel.vigoda@metro.us

The tour comes to the Susquehanna Bank Center in Camden, New Jersey, on Sunday. Get tickets at Livenation.com. PROVIDED

When it comes to his stand-up shows, Anthony Jeselnik is not willing to make compromises — even if he's performing in front of thousands at a Funny or Die festival.

"I would never accept a job where there are things I couldn't do," he says. "They might recommend things, they might say, 'Try to keep it a little nicer, try to keep it a little less edgy.' But I of course will not do that."

Jeselnik, who you've seen hosting Comedy Central roasts (including one of Donald Trump) and NBC's "Last Comic Standing," is on tour with Funny or Die's Oddball Comedy and Curiosity Festival, alongside Aziz Ansari, Amy Schumer, Nick Kroll and a long list of other notable comics. We chatted with him about watching his friends perform — and not having a plan B.

So when you're told to tone it down a bit, does that make you want to go even edgier?

I only have one speed. That's to be as edgy as possible. If you told me to be more edgy, it would be impossible. I don't have a plan B — I just have this one thing that I do.

Being part of a tour like Oddball versus hosting a show like "Last Comic Standing" — which do you prefer?

A mix of both is necessary because one feeds the other. I'm on TV, so people come and see me when I perform live. And the thing I like about performing live is no one can tell me what to do. I'm my own boss; I have no censors. I can do whatever I want — and you can't do that on television. And Oddball is great because with stand-up, with comedy, you're always on your own. With Oddball, it's a chance for all of us to hang out.

Whose performances at Oddball are you most excited about seeing?

Oh, I won't watch a single performance. I will do my set and then I'll go in the back and read a book.

You really won't watch anyone's?

I just don't watch that much comedy. For me to really enjoy comedy anymore, [the comedian] has to be a genius, or be my friend. So maybe I'll catch a couple acts here or there. I might watch Amy, Aziz or Nick Kroll, since they're my friends. But for the most part — I'm doing 18 of these things. You have to pace yourself. You have to go in the back and read a book.

Who do you usually test things out on to see if you're going too far?

Stand-up is so different than asking a friend, "What do you think about this joke?" If you do it's usually a disaster. They just look at you like you're crazy. You have to find out in front of a real crowd.

Aries Show others what you are made of. Taking a leadership position within your current field will give you the opportunity to highlight your talents.

Taurus Your personal life will heat up, but don't invite trouble by neglecting responsibilities on the home front. Keep your promises.

Gemini A short jaunt away from familiar locales will provide you with inspiration for a new project. You will meet someone with compatible interests.

Cancer Changes are inevitable. Rather than fight or evade what's happening, take a look to see how you can turn things to your best advantage.

Leo Don't slide into cruise control thinking things will run smoothly without your supervision. You will be a prime contender for a promotion.

Virgo Changes are in the works, but don't expect to be offered much information. Get your facts firsthand and avoid being misled.

Libra You will be bored if you have too much time on your hands. Fill your day by putting unfinished business to rest.

Scorpio Negotiations and contracts should be carefully considered. You will be less inclined to overreact if you can keep out of people's way.

Sagittarius Everyone will be drawn to you. Discuss your plans openly and call in favors or ask for help with the projects you are ready to pursue.

Capricorn Get all the facts in place before you make plans. You will be accused of overstepping your boundaries if you come on too strong.

Aquarius It's your future, so take all the time you need to feel comfortable. Moving too quickly will cause you to make mistakes.

Pisces Don't limit what you can do. If you feel that a new position will be more rewarding, go after it.

Running wild

Murray takes shot at McCoy

When asked about LeSean McCoy's recent marks about DeMarco Murray — saying he didn't see Murray as competition among the NFL's best backs — the new Eagles featured running back said Thursday: "At some point you've got to move on with your life and career."

Phillies fans played a role in Amaro's firing

MLB. The Phillies have already begun their search for a new general manager to replace Ruben Amaro Jr.

He was a polarizing figure in his role as Phillies GM. And whether you believe the downfall of the once-mighty Phillies was his fault or was out of his control, one thing is for sure about Ruben Amaro Jr.: He was bold during his time in Philly.

As GM, Amaro brought in Roy Halladay, Cliff Lee (twice) and a bevy of others while signing Ryan Howard, Cole Hamels and others to inflated contracts.

And after seven years of calling the shots following the Phils' 2008 World Series title, incoming president Andy MacPhail decided it was time to make a change.

"I've learned as much as I think I can over the last two months with this organization," MacPhail, who was hired earlier this summer, said, "all with the intent of finding a way to return the Phillies to the consistent contender status they enjoyed in the recent past. Unfortunately, we decided we need a fresh approach in the baseball operations department."

Along with the ownership group, led by John Middleton, MacPhail decided to turn the page. "We were certainly aware of the fans' feelings," Middleton said.

Quoted

"Right now we should all be about 2016. Everything were do from this point forward is about 2016." Andy MacPhail

"All of us in this room exist because of the fans," Middleton added on Thursday. "If they didn't buy tickets or watch TV none in this room would have a job. They are critical, and what they think is important to us."

Ironically, the legacy of Amaro's impact on the Phillies can't fully be judged yet.

Over the last 10 months, he shipped off Hamels, Chase Utley, Jimmy Rollins and others and has brought in more than 14 prospects, many of them highly touted.

"Ruben Amaro ran that trade deadline room," MacPhail said.

Amaro got a decent haul for Hamels, and was able to get good returns for Utley, Ben Revere and Jonathan Papelbon as well.

"I think there's reason to be optimistic about the position player future of this franchise," MacPhail said. "The pitching issues are a concern. They are a big concern, and that's something we have to focus on."

Jets, Chargers are best bets on NFL's opening weekend

NFL. If you make a wager (not that we condone such a thing), put money on the Jets, Chargers and Colts this week.

Phillip Rivers will be helped by a potent running game led by Melvin Gordon and Danny Woodhead. / GETTY IMAGES

Colts (-3) at Bills
The Colts come into the 2015 season as one of the favorites to win the Super Bowl, and they'll open against a common playoff "sleeper" pick for this year in Buffalo. The Bills are a new-look team as they brought in Rex Ryan to take over as head coach. LeSean McCoy will be the go-to running back with Fred Jackson and C.J. Spiller out of the picture.

The Bills are 6-1 ATS (against the spread) as a home underdog going back to 2013. Andrew Luck is a frontrunner for the MVP, but the Bills defense was ranked 4th in yards allowed last season, so he'll have his hands full on the road.

The pick: Colts -3

Browns at Jets (-3)
The Jets may not be a playoff-caliber squad, but the Browns are destined to be amongst the dregs of the league this year. Cleveland lost productive TE Jordan Cameron to the Dolphins in free agency and WR Josh Gordon to a year-long substance-abuse suspension. The Jets 6th-ranked defense from last year should have no problem containing either Josh McCown or Johnny Manziel and the lack of talent around them. As long as Ryan Fitzpatrick doesn't throw the game away the Jets should grab an easy win in Metlife Stadium to kick off the new season.

The pick: Jets -3

Lions at Chargers (-2.5)
The Lions were not nearly as good as their 11-5 record last year would have you believe. Detroit was 6-1 in one-score games and had a turnover ratio of plus-7 (these things tend to even out from year to year), and based on point differential the Lions should have only won nine games. The Chargers should be able to tame this weakened Lions defense as Philip Rivers has a slew of options at wideout including the newly acquired Stevie Johnson, who is due for a career renaissance.

The pick: Chargers -2.5

ADRIAN PETERSON
GETTY IMAGES

Joe Pisapia's FanDuel NFL Week 1 lineup picks:

Quarterback:

I briefly flirted with Aaron Rodgers and Andrew Luck, but their road matchups are slight turn-offs, even in cash games. Their respective salaries also made them even more unappealing (north of $9K each). Over the last few weeks, Sam Bradford has looked very comfortable in Chip Kelly's high-volume offense. Playing in Atlanta, in a dome, against a solid defense, Bradford saves me another $500, which allows me to upgrade at another position without a drop-off in QB production.

FINAL SELECTION:
Sam Bradford $7,500

Running backs:

At one point, I was willing to pay all the way up for Adrian Peterson at $9,200, but with so much time to think about it, doing this now seems unnecessary. I wanted to stay in the top tier for my RB1 and Eddie Lacy is in a spot where I feel most comfortable dropping down in price.

FINAL SELECTION:
Eddie Lacy $8,500

Wide receivers:

After my top choice in Jordy Nelson went down with a season-ending injury, Julio Jones was the obvious pivot for me. Once I turned the page to Bradford, Jordan Matthews was the logical choice. Kelvin Benjamin left the mix due to injury and Andre Johnson was hovering in my mind, but I was looking toward the end zone. Is there a more maligned player who scored 10 TDs last year than Mike Wallace?

FINAL SELECTIONS:
Julio Jones $9,000/Jordan Matthews $6,800/Mike Wallace $6,400

Tight end:

Peyton Manning has a history of using the tight end in his offense and Owen Daniels should at least be a target in the end zone. His track record makes him worth the upgrade of a few hundred dollars.

FINAL SELECTION:
Owen Daniels $5,500

Union can't worry about other teams, just selves

MLS. The Union still have an outside shot at nabbing a spot in the MLS playoffs.

The Union have six regular-season games remaining. / GETTY IMAGES

The Union (8-14-6) can't worry about the sixth-place Montreal Impact (9-11-4) this week. They can't worry about the teams below them (Orlando City SC, New York City FC, Chicago Fire) in the standings right now. They can't worry about the fact that they've fielded 31 different lineups this season and that at any given moment they could be playing with a new teammate beside them.

The Union need to worry about themselves. They need to worry about the Columbus Crew (11-9-8) this weekend and they need to worry about the six games remaining in the regular season. They sit just one point out of the final playoff spot in the East and things aren't going to get any easier for Philly's blue and gold.

"Sometimes, guys are injured, some guys are with national teams, different things have happened this year — some off the field stuff — it's been challenging," said Union manager Jim Curtin. "But, like I said before, it's how you finish the season, that's what people remember, and our guys still have an opportunity to finish strong with the Open Cup final and, obviously, the six games remaining."

Another factor going against the Union in recent months have been their regular-season play at home. They haven't won a home game since July 11, a 3-0 win over the Portland Timbers. They've gone a winless 0-2-1 in the three games since.

"It's difficult to really put a finger on it," Curtin said on the team's play at home. "No one thing I can really point to. We have three [home games] and three [road games] left, so I don't care how the wins come. We have to win."

The Crew were not only handed a 3-0 loss to FC Dallas this past weekend, they also lost their top defender, Gaston Sauro, to a head injury. They're 1-1-0 against the Union this season, their last win coming on April 25.

In their last meeting on June 3, the Union thumped the Crew to a final of 3-0 in arguably their best performance of the season. Union forward C.J. Sapong was disruptive and active on his way to a goal and an assist in the contest. They'll need the very best from Sapong on Saturday against an offensively potent Crew team that is tied for second in the MLS in scoring with 45 goals on the year.

"We want to start to press with C.J. [Sapong]," Curtin said. "At the end of the day, it comes down to all 11 guys being on the same page. With Columbus, they're a team that baits you into high pressing and then can kind of expose you if you're a step late — if one guy's a step late, there's sort of a domino effect."

The skinny

Saturday's match against the Crew will air at 7 p.m. on The Comcast Network.

- "The best way to approach Columbus, even though it's on our home field, might be to have the mindset of making them really break us down," Jim Curtin said, "as opposed to flying out at them and playing into their strengths."
